ABOUT CCIB

Helping build respectful, mutually beneficial business relationships between Indigenous and non-Indigenous businesses has been a long journey for CCIB that began in 1982 when a group of diverse business leaders came together to discuss their shared responsibility in improving Indigenous participation in the country's economy.

Today, Canadian Council for Indigenous Business provides more than 2,900 members, including more than 1,935 Certified Indigenous Businesses (CIBs), with programming, tools, training, network-building, business awards, research, advocacy and national and regional events to advance economic reconciliation across the country and keep Indigenous entrepreneurs positioned for growth.

ABOUT THE AWARDS

Each year, CCIB celebrates outstanding individuals and businesses by presenting six awards that highlight the vital contributions Indigenous entrepreneurs, leaders, and businesses make to the Canadian business landscape.

To align with the award presentation schedule, nominations are accepted through two nomination cycles throughout the year. Individuals may self-nominate or nominate a deserving individual or business for consideration.
